Delhi Transport Department offers a wonderful gift to those purchasing e-rickshaws/e-cart loading vehicles in Delhi

Parivahan Vishesh News

Presented by Pinki Kundu, Co-Editor, Parivahan Vishesh

Delhi Transport Department offers a wonderful gift to those registering e-rickshaws/e-cart loading vehicles in Delhi.

On September 2, 2026, a meeting chaired by the Special Transport Commissioner took three important decisions regarding the registration of e-rickshaws and e-cart loading vehicles.

The Joint Commissioner of Transport Operations, AD IT, DTOs of Mall Road, Dwarka, Wazirpur, Rohini I, Raja Garden, Headquarters, along with the CMVI VIU Burari were present at this important meeting.

Three crucial decisions were taken in this meeting regarding the registration of e-rickshaws/e-cart loading vehicles:

1. E-rickshaws) Bank account details will no longer be required from the owner registering for e-cart loading.
2. E-rickshaws) Aadhaar card will no longer be required from the owner registering for e-cart loading.
3. E-rickshaws) Owners registering for e-cart loading can now register as many e-rickshaws/e-cart loading vehicles as they wish.

The key point that emerged from the decisions taken in the meeting, chaired by the Special Transport Commissioner, is that since the government no longer provides any subsidy on the purchase of e-rickshaws/e-cart loading vehicles, the department no longer requires bank details for their registration. Furthermore, since no subsidy is applicable, the ban on such subsidy should be lifted, and upon lifting the ban, Aadhaar card will no longer be required.

The decisions taken in the meeting chaired by the Special Transport Commissioner have been implemented with immediate effect, having received the Transport Commissioner's approval.

This is great news for vehicle owners in Delhi who wish to expand their business by purchasing e-rickshaws/e-cart loading vehicles.

For your information, a copy of the minutes of the meeting containing the decisions taken in this important meeting is presented.

Parivahan Vishesh News

The public is being looted in the name of pollution in Delhi - what is the game of scrapping 10/15-year-old vehicles?

An elderly man's vehicle, which has driven 15,000 kilometers, is scrapped, but traffic jams remain - the real pollution isn't caused by vehicles, but by the failure of the traffic police!

Special Interview Correspondent: Rajesh Garg, Former MLA, Rohini, Delhi

Presented by: Pinki Kundu, Co-Editor, Parivahan Vishesh

Introduction - A story begins with an elderly man's eyes: An MCD crane is parked in the society. An elderly man's eyes are filled with tears. 15 years ago, his son lovingly gifted him a car. It's driven a total of 15,000 kilometers, without a single scratch. But the order is: it will be scrapped. It's not a car, it's a memento of his son.

On the other hand, there's a commercial taxi that covers 100,000 kilometers a year and emits smoke. The law weighs both on the same scale. Is this justice?

Special discussion on this.

Facts and Rules - What is the 10/15-year rule?

1. Root of the Rule - NGT and Supreme Court:
 - NGT order dated 07.04.2015 (Vardhaman Kaushik vs Union of India): Diesel vehicles older than 10 years and petrol vehicles older than 15 years will not ply in Delhi NCR.
 - The Supreme Court upheld this order on 29.10.2018 in MC Mehta vs Union of India (WP 13029/1985). This rule is still applicable only in Delhi NCR, not in the entire country.

2. Private vs. Commercial - The Biggest Injustice: A private car travels an average of 8,000-10,000 km a year. 1.5 lakh km in 15 years.

A commercial taxi/auto travels 80,000-1,00,000 km a year. 1.5 lakh km in 15 years.

- Then how come both have the same lifespan?
- Is pollution caused by kilometers or by calendars?

3. Scrap Game - Junk in Delhi, Star Outside: Currently, there are only 3 authorized Registered Vehicle Scrapping Facility (RVSF) in Delhi, out of which 1 is not recognized by the Central Government.

Question - How does the same vehicle that is causing pollution in Delhi, after taking NOC, go to UP, Haryana, Rajasthan and become pollution-free? Is the air there different? Does this mean that the pollution is not in the vehicle, but in the system.

Biggest revelation - That false affidavit given in the Supreme Court This is the biggest allegation of Mr. Bathla ji.

The Story of Euro Fuel: When BS-2 transitioned from to BS-4, three ministries of the Indian government—the Ministry of Heavy Industries, the Ministry of Petroleum, and the Ministry of Road Transport—submitted a written affidavit to the Supreme Court stating, "The day Euro/BS IV fuel is introduced in the country, petroleum pollution will be reduced to zero."

Question No. 1: Today, Delhi uses BS-6 fuel, which is even better than Euro-IV. If the fuel itself is pollution-free according to the affidavit, how are vehicles causing pollution?

Question No. 2: If the affidavit was false, why were the officials not prosecuted under Section 228 (giving a false affidavit) of the BNS Act and Section 2(c) of the Contempt of Court Act 1971? Why should the public suffer the consequences of their mistakes?

The same situation with CNG: When CNG was introduced, the Bhure Lal Committee received the Magsaysay Award, and Sunita Narayan received the Padma Shri.

It was claimed that CNG is non-polluting. Today, those same CNG vehicles are being scrapped after 15 years, and government departments and commissions are stating in writing that they are polluting vehicles. Will the same thing happen to electric vehicles tomorrow?

Who is the real culprit? - Traffic jams are the root cause of pollution. Traffic jams in front of hospitals, religious places, and schools. The amount of fuel a vehicle burns

Loot in the Name of Pollution?

What is the game of scrapping 10/15-year-old vehicles?

Parivahan Vishesh News | Special Investigative Editorial, Interview Based: Mr. Sanjay Bathla | Presented by Pinki Kundu

in one hour while parked causes pollution equivalent to driving 40 kilometers.

The order of responsibility according to Mr. Bathla:

1st - Traffic Police: Their job is to manage traffic, they stand around and issue challans. If there are traffic jams, pollution will increase, and accidents will increase. Why isn't removing traffic jams a priority?

2nd - MCD/Municipal Corporation: Encroachment on footpaths, potholes on roads, markets without parking licenses. If the vehicle isn't on the road, where will it be parked?

3rd - NDMC: Why is the AQI 400 in a VVIP area where even a bird can't fly? The NDMC will have to answer for this.

4th - PWD: The design of roads, the synchronization of signals, which even today are based on 1980 standards.

And the head of all this - the Transport Department, which is busy collecting revenue.

What are the rights of the public under the Constitution and the law?

1. Article 21 - Right to Life: The Supreme Court has repeatedly stated that breathing clean air is part of the right to life. But at the same time -

2. Article 300A - Right to Property: One's personal property (vehicle) cannot be taken away without due process of law. Isn't forcibly scrapping a vehicle that has run 15,000 km a violation of the right to property?

3. Sections 53 and 55 of the Motor Vehicles Act: A vehicle's registration can be cancelled only if it is proven unfit, not just on the basis of age. Fitness should be based on kilometers and emissions, not age.

4. Supreme Court's latest stance (2025): When the BJP government in Delhi filed a petition in the Supreme Court stating that they did not want to scrap vehicles based on age, the Supreme Court verbally stated - "No agency will forcibly seize pre-BS-4 vehicles (pre-2010) until the court gives a final decision." This means that the court is now considering emissions, not age.

Formula for recovering money - The final truth Where will the money come from for free electricity, free water, and free bus travel?

Mislead the public -

- If you buy a car, you pay 28% GST + 20% road tax
- If you drive it, you pay pollution certificate, fitness certificate, challan, toll tax

Scrapped after 10/15 years, then the government pays again GST and countless cesses and parking fees

Who benefits? Motor manufacturing companies? No, governments

Editorial Demand - What is the solution?

- Look at emissions, not age: As in foreign countries

- Actual Emission Test every year and KM-based Fitness. Any vehicle that passes will be allowed to operate, even if it is 20 years old.

- Affidavits should be investigated: The Parliamentary Petitions Committee or the Supreme Court itself should investigate the affidavits to determine who the officials who declared Euro fuel and CNG pollution-free were.

- Traffic police accountability should be fixed for a jam-free Delhi: Monthly AQI and traffic jam data should be made public, and the responsibility of the concerned ACP Traffic should be fixed.

Final point: Today, vehicles are being scrapped on the grounds of age. What will happen tomorrow? The government will say, You are 60 years old, you are not fit to live in Delhi, are you also polluting? This is not a joke, this is something to think about.

The government actually does not want to eliminate pollution, because if pollution is alive, revenue is alive.

Skin ageing is a natural process that affects everyone. Skin naturally changes over time, but how quickly it changes depends on your daily choices. As we age, our skin undergoes changes: wrinkles, fine lines, age spots, loss of elasticity, and so much more damage. While it's essential to care for your skin with the right products, it's not the only aspect to consider for radiant skin. Your lifestyle and daily habits play a significant role in how your skin looks. Lack of sleep, an unbalanced diet, or excessive sun exposure can lead to premature ageing, acne, dullness, or even long-term skin issues. When such habits persist, the skin loses elasticity, becomes thinner, and regenerates more slowly. Surprisingly, some of the most common lifestyle habits can slowly damage your skin without you realising it. From poor sleep patterns to small mistakes in your daily routine, these hidden culprits Here are some tips that you can apply or change in your daily life to delay the signs of ageing and prevent wrinkles, fine lines, and dark spots from forming. 1---Smoking ----- Tobacco use has a significant effect on the acceleration of biological age in smokers. Chemicals in tobacco smoke break down collagen and elastin, which keep skin firm and stretchy. Over time, smokers are more likely to experience dry skin, uneven skin pigmentation, baggy eyes, a saggy jawline and deep facial wrinkles and furrows. Smoking impairs the skin's ability to repair itself because it promotes the production of an enzyme called metalloproteinase , responsible for breaking down collagen in the skin and causing it to sag. Smoking reduces the amount of blood flowing to the skin by constricting blood vessels near the skin's surface, depleting the skin of oxygen and essential nutrients transported in blood. 2--- Taking hot showers and baths We all love long, steamy showers, especially after a tiring day or during chilly winters, don't we? Your skin has a natural layer of oils that lock in moisture and keep it soft. Taking a hot, steamy shower or bath may feel therapeutic, but it can strip away natural oils and weaken the skin barrier, which can lead to premature ageing over time.A hot water bath can cause collagen and elasticity loss, leading to fine lines, dullness, and rough texture over time.Hot water changes the pH of the skin surface, and it creates conditions that may either promote irritation or exacerbate pre-existing dermatological conditions.The moisture is easily evaporated off the skin after the hot shower, making it drier. The constant dehydration hastens the effects of skin ageing, like fine lines and coarse texture, over time. In fact, the face and hands, which already have thin skin and fewer oil glands, are especially vulnerable to excessive heat.Hot water removes the natural sebum of the scalp, causing it to become dry, flaky, and sensitive. "The hair shafts subjected to high temperatures lose moisture and proteins; hair becomes frizzy, dull, and prone to breakage3----- Excessive Screen TimeScreens are an inescapable part of modern life; whether it's your smartphone, laptop, tablet, or TV, we're surrounded by them nearly all day. But while we scroll, stream, and swipe, a silent side effect is slowly growing: digital ageing. You can easily ll, tired, or even pigmented after long hours in front of your laptop or phone. Excessive screen time is an emerging, under-recognised contributor to premature ageing. Phones, tablets, and computers emit what's known as high-energy visible light, or blue light, which penetrates the skin more deeply than you might expect, reaching into the dermis where collagen and elastin live. Collagen breakdown due to blue light leads to early sagging and wrinkles, something dermatologists are increasingly treating. Blue light exposure generates reactive oxygen species (ROS), unstable molecules that cause oxidative stress leading to visible signs of ageing like fine lines, loss of elasticity, and dullness. 4--Sleeping Position – We all have preferable sleeping positions that feel most n comfortable to us. Whether you're a stomach, o back, or side sleeper the position in which you t sleep can expose you to sleep lines that c ultimately become etched in your face. People e who favour sleeping on one side of their body y tend to have a flatter face on their sleeping side o and are more susceptible to chin, cheek, and u chest lines, whereas stomach sleepers are more r prone to forehead wrinkles. Sleep wrinkles are s creased lines caused by the mechanical k compression, distortion, and friction of your i face against a pillow when sleeping on your side n or stomach.Temporary sleep wrinkles can l become persistent with time and repetition. As o we age, our skin loses elasticity (recoil) and o extensibility (stretch), creating ideal conditions k for sleep wrinkles or lines to set in and last i longer 5--Sweets-----Excess sugar speeds up n ageing both inside and outside the body through g a chemical process called glycation. Excess d glucose in the bloodstream can cause skin u issues, such as wrinkles, brown spots, yellowing skin and sagging, among others. Simple carbohydrates, including refined sugar, lead to "a burst of inflammation throughout the body." When we have high-glycemic foods, i.e. foods laden with sugar, our insulin levels are suddenly raised. The other effects of this are congested tissues, an increase in oil-gland activity and even visible signs of premature ageing. The digested sugar causes a breakdown of collagen and elastin, which leads to sagging skin and wrinkles. Regularly consuming high amounts of added sugar can contribute to chronic inflammation, insulin resistance and metabolic stress. Not just on a chair... try eating while sitting on the floor sometimes!

Parivahan Vishesh News

Pinki Kundu | Co-Editor, Transport Special

Have you ever wondered why our grandparents used to eat while sitting on the floor? Here are some benefits of eating on the floor:

1. Increases physical activity: Sitting down on the floor and getting up engages various muscles and joints in the body.
2. Helps maintain joint flexibility: Sitting cross-legged involves movement of the hips, knees, and ankles.
3. Improves sitting posture: Sitting correctly can help develop the habit of keeping the back straight.
4. Encourages slower eating: Eating calmly and mindfully can help prevent overeating.

5. Aids in weight control: While sitting on the floor isn't a weight-loss cure, the habit of eating slowly and in the right portions can help manage weight.

6. Keeps the focus on the meal: Eating away from mobile phones and TVs fosters the habit of mindful eating.

7. A good traditional habit: Along with a proper diet, regular exercise, and adequate sleep, such small, positive habits can become part of a healthy lifestyle.

Important Note: If you suffer from knee, back, or joint pain, or find it difficult to sit on or rise from the floor, do not force yourself to do so.

Re-adapt the good habits of our elders—because a healthy life begins with small habits!

Important Precautions for Managing Diabetes!

Parivahan Vishesh News

Pinki Kundu | Co-Editor, Transport Special

While medications are crucial for controlling diabetes, one should never increase, decrease, or change the dosage without a doctor's advice. Incorrect or excessive use of medication can lead to certain issues:

1. Very low blood sugar (Hypoglycemia): Symptoms include dizziness, sweating, hand tremors, weakness, or—in severe cases—fainting.
2. Stomach-related issues: Nausea, vomiting, diarrhea, or stomach pain—some medications may cause these side effects.
3. Weight gain: Certain diabetes medications can lead to weight gain.
4. Kidney-related precautions: If there is a pre-existing kidney condition, the doctor may need to adjust the dosage of certain medications.

5. Liver-related precautions: Monitoring liver function may be necessary while taking certain medications.

6. Vitamin B12 deficiency: Long-term use of Metformin can lead to low Vitamin B12 levels in some people, causing weakness or a tingling sensation in the hands and feet.

7. Different medications have different effects: Therefore, always take medication exactly as advised by your doctor.

What precautions should be taken?

1. Do not change the dosage without consulting your doctor.
2. Take medications on time.
3. Check your blood sugar regularly.
4. Pay attention to your diet and physical activity.
5. Undergo the tests recommended by your doctor on schedule.

Important Advice: Avoid both abruptly stopping diabetes medication and taking more than prescribed on your own.

Anxiety: Causes, Symptoms, Physical Impact, and the Holistic Homeopathic Approach

Parivahan Vishesh News

Author: Dr. Rup Kumar Banerjee, Homeopathic Physician

Anxiety is a natural emotional response in humans. Feeling nervous before an exam, restless before an interview, or concerned about a loved one's health is normal. The problem arises when anxiety becomes excessive, persists for months, and begins to affect a person's sleep, work, relationships, and overall enjoyment of life.

It is incorrect to dismiss anxiety merely as a "habit of overthinking." It is a condition that affects both the mind and the body.

Key Causes of Anxiety

There is no single cause for anxiety; rather, it stems from a combination of factors.

1. Chronic Stress and Excessive Responsibilities: When job pressure, business fluctuations, financial troubles, and family disputes persist over a long period, one's mental resilience diminishes. Today, a single individual often juggles multiple roles—managing family, a career, children's education, and the care of elderly relatives.
2. Uncertainty About the Future: Questions like "What if I lose my job?" or "What if I fall ill?" can constantly occupy the mind, causing a person to battle imaginary problems even while living in the present.
3. Financial and Relationship Stress: Debt, a drop in income, marital discord, loneliness, or emotional neglect can breed a sense of insecurity.
4. Childhood Experiences and Major Life Changes: An environment filled with fear, criticism, or insecurity during childhood can impact one's future ability to cope with stress. Similarly, major life transitions—such as changing jobs, marriage, divorce, relocation, the death of a loved one, or retirement—can trigger anxiety.

5. Lifestyle-Related Factors: Lack of sleep; excessive consumption of tea, coffee, or energy drinks; constant social media comparisons; exposure to negative news; and repeatedly searching the internet for symptoms related to health issues can all fuel the cycle of anxiety. Sometimes, symptoms of certain physical ailments can mimic anxiety; therefore, a medical check-up is essential if one experiences persistent heart palpitations, dizziness, or breathing difficulties for the first time.

Impact on Behavior Persistent anxiety often leads a person to avoid crowds, withdraw from social events, seek repeated medical tests, and shy away from making decisions. Gradually, this habit of avoidance restricts one's life.

Why is the Homeopathic Approach Important? Homeopathy does not view anxiety merely as a label. It seeks to understand the individual in their entirety—considering their mental state, fears, sleep patterns, digestion, and personal nature.

Two people may suffer from anxiety, yet their experiences differ. One might find calm in solitude, while another seeks the company of loved ones when anxious. One person might worry about the future, while another worries about their health. Homeopathy places great importance on these individual differences.

Listening to the patient is also an integral part of the treatment. Often, it is the first time a patient feels that someone is listening to their troubles seriously. This sense of trust plays a crucial role in the healing process. Additionally, regular exercise, adequate sleep, a balanced diet, yoga, pranayama (breathing exercises), and healthy communication with family help strengthen mental health. When Should You Seek Medical Help? It is advisable to consult a doctor if anxiety persists for several weeks, interferes with daily activities, causes chronic sleep disturbances, leads to social withdrawal, or results in recurring panic-like episodes.

If a person experiences thoughts of self-harm, these must not be ignored; seek immediate help from a mental health professional or emergency services.

Remember, anxiety is neither a character flaw nor a sign of weakness. Instead of hiding it, the best approach is to understand it and seek timely, appropriate advice.

Human civilization has been built on relationships. Family, friendship, neighbourhood, society and community—all have traditionally rested on values such as trust, cooperation, compassion and a sense of belonging. There was a time when a person’s identity was not determined by wealth, but by character, conduct, values and humanity. Even with limited resources, people stood by one another in times of happiness and sorrow. When there was a celebration in one home, the entire neighbourhood shared the joy; when someone faced difficulty, neighbours often arrived to help without being asked.

Times have changed. Economic progress has brought numerous conveniences and opportunities into our lives, but it has also transformed the nature of relationships. Money is no longer merely a necessity for living; at times, it has become a measure of social status, success and even the value of relationships. The question is not whether money is bad. Money is essential. The concern arises when money stops being a means and becomes the primary purpose of life. At that point, its influence on relationships and humanity can become deeply troubling.

The Changing Meaning of Relationships

A relationship is fundamentally an emotional bond. It involves trust, respect, sacrifice, responsibility and mutual care. Yet in modern life, relationships are sometimes viewed through the lens of profit and loss. People may begin to ask: What will I gain from this relationship? Who can help me? How can this relationship benefit me socially or financially?

Such thinking gradually weakens the very soul of relationships.

When the strength of a relationship depends more on economic status than on love and trust, the relationship becomes less emotional and more transactional. A person’s income, profession, property, car, house and social standing increasingly become part of how that person is judged.

This is not limited to one section of society. Economic competition has influenced almost every area of modern life.

Returning to the World of Books and Libraries

Dr. Vijay Garg

In an age dominated by smartphones, social media and instant digital information, the habit of sitting quietly with a book is slowly becoming less common. We can access millions of pages with a few taps, yet many people are losing the patience to read deeply. In this changing environment, returning to books and libraries is not a step backward; it may be a step toward a more thoughtful and meaningful future.

Libraries have always been more than rooms filled with books. They are spaces where curiosity grows, ideas meet and minds develop. A good library offers students, teachers, researchers and ordinary readers an opportunity to explore subjects beyond the limits of their classrooms or daily lives.

Books provide something that short digital content often cannot: depth. Reading a complete book requires attention, imagination and reflection. It allows us to

Relationships, Wealth and Changing Humanity

Money Is Necessary, But It Is Not Everything

Money is an important necessity of life. We need financial resources for food, education, healthcare, housing and many other basic needs. Financial independence can provide security and help individuals become self-reliant. The problem is not money itself; it is our attitude towards money.

When wealth becomes the only basis of respect, a dangerous inequality begins to emerge. Wealthy people may receive greater recognition while those with fewer financial resources may be given less importance. Sometimes a person’s financial position is valued more than honesty, knowledge, sensitivity or character.

But history shows that greatness does not always come from wealth. Many people who changed the world lived simple lives, yet their ideas, actions and humanity were extraordinary.

How much wealth a person possesses may reveal their financial position; how great that person truly is is revealed by their behaviour.

The Economics of Relationships Within Families

The family is traditionally regarded as the place where a person is accepted without conditions. Yet economic calculations have increasingly entered some family relationships as well.

Sometimes parents begin to measure their children’s success primarily through their jobs, salaries, possessions and financial achievements. Children, in turn, may begin to associate their parents’ love and respect with their financial capacity

.Even in marriage, excessive importance is sometimes given to income, profession, property and social status. When the future of two individuals is judged primarily through financial comparison, the emotional and human foundation of the relationship can become weak.

The real wealth of a family is not in its bank account but in the trust and affection shared among its members.

Friendship Is Changing Too

True friendship means standing by someone without selfish motives. Yet despite having more social contacts than ever before, people may sometimes have fewer deep and dependable friendships.

A person may have thousands of contacts on social media, but only a few people may actually stand beside them during difficult times.

Friendships can also be influenced by social status. A person’s family background, profession, income and social influence may increasingly affect whom others choose to associate with.

But a true friend is not merely someone who appears beside you during good times. A true friend is someone who continues to respect and support you during difficult circumstances.

The Elderly and Changing Family Values

Changing economic structures are also affecting older people. The weakening of joint families, migration for employment and changing lifestyles have contributed to loneliness among many elderly people.

Parents often spend decades sacrificing for the future of their children. Yet in the later stages of life, they need more than financial support. They need time, respect, companionship and emotional connection.

Older people should never feel that their worth is determined by their property, income or financial contribution.

A society that respects its elderly parents creates a stronger sense of security and belonging for future generations as well.

Consumerism and the Culture of Display

Advertising and digital media constantly encourage us to believe that a better life means owning more things. A larger house, an expensive car, the latest smartphone, branded clothes and luxurious holidays are often presented as symbols of success.

This encourages a culture of comparison.

People begin comparing their lives with the carefully presented lives of others. The glamour displayed on social media does not represent the complete reality of anyone’s life, yet it can still influence our desires and expectations.

This culture of display can sometimes distance people from their genuine needs. They work more to earn more, spend more, and then enter an endless race to earn even more.

What is the first thing often lost in this race?

Time.

And with time, relationships.

Time Is the Most Valuable Possession

We can buy expensive gifts for our loved ones, but we cannot buy back our time.

The hours a child spends with parents may become lifelong memories. Half an hour spent talking to an elderly person can reduce their sense of loneliness. Sitting with a troubled friend and genuinely listening may be more valuable than any expensive gift.

Relationships need not only money; they need time.

If we can buy almost everything for our families but cannot find time to sit with them, perhaps we need to reconsider our priorities.

Redefining Success

We need to rethink our definition of success.

Is the most successful person the one with the greatest wealth?

Is success determined by the size of one’s house?

Is the person with the most expensive possessions necessarily the most successful?

Perhaps not.

True success should include financial stability, but it should also include emotional well-being, meaningful relationships, social responsibility and human sensitivity.

If a person is extremely wealthy but has become distant from family, lost the trust of friends and become insensitive to the suffering of others, then that person’s economic success remains incomplete.

The Real Test of Humanity

learning. Librarians also help readers discover

Returning to the World of Books and Libraries

Parivahan Vishesh News | Dr. Vijay Garg

resources that they might never find through ordinary internet searches.

Another valuable feature of libraries is their ability to create a culture of quiet concentration. In a world of constant notifications and interruptions, a library provides an environment where the mind can slow down. This quietness is not emptiness; it is an opportunity for thought.

Libraries can also strengthen

Humanity is not truly tested when we have everything. It is tested when we see another person’s need and choose to rise above our own self-interest to help.

Feeding someone who is hungry, supporting the education of a needy student, helping someone facing illness, talking to a lonely elderly person, or simply listening patiently to someone who is troubled—these actions may appear small, but they make society more humane.

Humanity does not always require great wealth. A kind word, a little compassion and some time can make a significant difference in someone’s life.

Relationships Are Not Investments

In the financial world, investment is made with the expectation of a return. But relationships are not investments.

If we help someone only because we expect that person to be useful to us in the future, it is not genuine help; it is a transaction.

A relationship becomes stronger when there is less calculation and more trust.

We also need to teach our children that earning money is important, but becoming a good human being is equally important.

We should not teach them only how to become successful; we must also teach them how to remain humble and compassionate after achieving success

.Can Modernity and Humanity Coexist?

Certainly.

Being modern is not wrong. Economic development, technology, better education and improved facilities can make human life better. The problem arises when human values are left behind in the pursuit of development.

We need a society where economic success is respected but poverty is not ridiculed; where the achievements of wealthy people are appreciated but the dignity of those with fewer resources is equally protected; where competition exists alongside compassion; and where ambition exists alongside sensitivity.

We must learn not to avoid earning wealth, but to avoid becoming slaves to wealth.

A Message for the Next Generation

Children learn from what they see around them. If they grow up watching every relationship being judged by money, they too may begin to view relationships through the same lens.

Therefore, homes need an environment of conversation, cooperation, service, respect and sensitivity.

The Real Test of Humanity

communities. A modern library can become a centre for reading clubs, discussions, lectures, exhibitions, workshops and educational activities. It can bring together people of different ages and backgrounds through a shared love of learning.

The future of libraries, therefore, should not be imagined as a choice between books and technology. Libraries can successfully combine both. Digital catalogues, e-books, online databases, educational platforms and multimedia resources can exist alongside traditional shelves. The library of the future can be both digital and physical, modern and timeless.

Parents and teachers have an important role in encouraging children to read. Instead of treating reading only as an examination requirement, they can help children discover books for pleasure. Even a few minutes of voluntary reading each day can gradually develop into a lifelong habit.

Society must also ensure that libraries remain accessible,

Children must understand that expensive clothes do not make a person great, a luxury car does not make someone noble, and a large bank balance is not proof of good character. help.

A person’s true identity is revealed by how they treat those from whom they have nothing to gain.

What Should We Change?

First, we need to reconsider our priorities

.Earn money, but do not lose your relationships.

Become successful, but do not look down upon others.

Enjoy comforts, but do not forget those in need.

Compete, but do not abandon compassion.

Give your children a better future, but also teach them to become better human beings.

Spend time with your family. Listen to your elders. Understand your children’s feelings. Share not only happiness but also difficult moments with your friends. Most importantly, learn to see every person as a human being, beyond their economic status.

Conclusion

The world is changing and will continue to change. Money is an important part of life, and economic prosperity is necessary. But the true prosperity of a society cannot be measured only by per-capita income, magnificent buildings or modern conveniences.

A society is truly prosperous when people trust one another, families support one another, elders are respected, children feel secure, and people in need are not left alone.

Wealth can make life more comfortable, but it cannot give life its deepest meaning.

Relationships cannot be accumulated like property. They have to be nurtured every day.

In the end, how much wealth we possessed may become only a small line in the story of our lives. But how many lives we improved, how many relationships we protected and how much humanity we shared—that will become our true legacy.

So earn money, but do not sell your relationships. Achieve success, but do not lose your humanity. Wealth can fulfil many of life’s needs, but the true richness of life comes from love, trust, compassion and humanity.

Dr. Vijay Garg Retired Principal, Educationist and Educational Columnist Science Writer Malout, Punjab, India

especially in rural and economically disadvantaged communities. A well-equipped library can provide opportunities to children who may not have extensive educational resources at home.

Returning to libraries does not mean rejecting technology. It means using technology wisely while preserving the human habit of deep reading, reflection and imagination.

A library is ultimately an investment in people. Every book placed on a shelf carries the possibility of changing a life. Every reader who enters a library carries the possibility of discovering a new idea, a new dream or a new direction.

In the rush of the digital world, perhaps we need to rediscover the simple pleasure of opening a book, turning its pages and allowing our minds to wander. The world of books and libraries is still waiting for us—not as a relic of the past, but as a doorway to the future.

Gaya College Teachers' Association Objects to 'General Conditions' Statute

Parivahan Vishesh News

Demand for Reconsideration of Provisions Regarding Service Conditions, Evaluation, and Leave

Gaya: The Gaya College Teachers' Association held a significant meeting on Wednesday, attended by faculty members from various departments. The meeting featured a detailed discussion on various provisions of the 'General Conditions' statute issued by the Governor's Secretariat. While acknowledging that several points in the statute are welcome, the teachers noted a lack of clarity in certain provisions that require reconsideration. Teachers expressed particular concern regarding provisions related to service contracts, self-assessment reports, and the probation period. It was noted that the statute mandates the submission of a self-assessment report three months prior to the end of the probation period and stipulates termination of service if the report is found unsatisfactory. Teachers have no objection to submitting reports; however, the statute must clearly define the specific tasks, responsibilities, and standards against which a teacher's performance will be evaluated for service confirmation or during the probation period. The teachers argued that an ambiguous evaluation system could foster corruption and arbitrary actions. This could allow university officials to unnecessarily harass teachers regarding service confirmation, promotions, and other matters. Therefore, clear, transparent, and objective standards for evaluation must be established. Questions were also raised regarding the provision for creating the post of DHE (Director of Higher Education). Teachers questioned the necessity and administrative role of the DHE post, given the existing structures involving the Vice-Chancellor, Registrar, and Governor's Secretariat. They also demanded a rationalization of the requirement for the Registrar to report to the DHE. Additionally, discussions were held on provisions concerning promotions and various types of leave, including commuted leave, casual leave, and paternity leave. Teachers observed that the system has been complicated by the addition of extra conditions to several provisions. They insisted that a final decision on these matters should be taken only after comprehensive deliberation. The teachers' association alleged that the government is moving ahead with implementing policies concerning universities without consulting the broader teaching community. Teachers pointed out that the University Act 2026 was also being introduced without adequate consultation, but the government was forced to back down following sustained opposition. Now, attempts are being made —through the Raj Bhavan Secretariat —to undermine the autonomy and rights of universities and colleges, which is unacceptable. The meeting was attended by Gaya College Teachers' Association President Prof. Vibha Singh, Secretary Dr. Anand Kumar, Treasurer Dr. Panna Lal, members Dr. Markandey Pandey and Dr. Anup Kumar, Contoller of Examinations Dr. Som Nath, and PRO Dr. Rajesh Mishra, along with faculty members from the departments of Chemistry, Mathematics, Pali, Political Science, and others.

Vice-Chancellor Inspects MSME Center Ahead of Union Minister's Visit

Impressed by Facilities for 3D Printing, Robotics, and AI Technology

Both Gaya: Preparations have intensified for the proposed visit of Union Minister for Micro, Small and Medium Enterprises (MSME) Jitan Ram Manjhi to the MSME Center at Magadh University on September 12. In this context, a university administration team led by Vice-Chancellor Prof. Dilip Kumar Keshari and Registrar Prof.

Vinod Kumar Mangalam inspected the MSME Center on Wednesday. During the visit, officials assessed the state-of-the-art technical and skill development facilities available at the center.

The modern machinery installed at the center impressed the officials. An advanced 3D printing machine, valued at approximately five crore rupees, was a major highlight. Officials noted that once the shape and design are programmed, the machine can produce various complex 3D figures — including idols of Lord Ganesha —within minutes. The center also houses facilities for robotics, Artificial Intelligence (AI), advanced painting, and other modern skill-based machinery.

Following the inspection, the Vice-Chancellor remarked that such cutting-edge facilities are typically found only in select MSME centers and premier technical institutes across the country. The presence of such a center on the Magadh University campus offers a significant opportunity for students. He noted that, due to a lack of information and publicity, a large number of students remain unaware of these facilities.

The Vice-Chancellor and Registrar urged students to take advantage of the MSME Center's vocational and skill-based courses to give a new direction to their careers. A comprehensive awareness campaign will soon be launched by the university administration and the MSME Center. The initiative aims to provide students with training in modern technology, thereby opening up better avenues for employment and self-employment.

The Vital Role of Police in Public Service: The Diligence of Inspector Ashok Dubey in Govind Nagar

Parivahan Vishesh News

Kanpur. Under the leadership and directives of Police Commissioner Raghubir Lal, continuous efforts are being made to uphold law and order. In this context, Inspector Ashok Kumar Dubey—stationed at Govind Nagar, one of Kanpur’s most challenging police stations—remains consistently active in maintaining peace, acting against criminals, and championing the cause of victims. His deep commitment to duty has previously proven his postings at various other stations to be highly effective in the public interest. His tenure in Govind Nagar so far—marked by the satisfactory resolution of IGRS and other grievances, the successful solving of cases, and the arrest of perpetrators—stands as a testament to his popularity, leadership skills, and a work style defined by impartiality and transparency.

Regarding any appointment to a specific post or location, there is also a spiritual dimension. Transfers or appointments often lead one to places on earth never visited before and bring one into contact with people never met previously. The point is that just as birth and death are predestined, so too is the intervening period—life itself. Within the divine order of the universe, it is preordained who will be where, with whom, for how long, and what role they will play.

From this spiritual perspective, when a distressed or suffering person seeks help, it signifies that the Almighty has arrived in that form to test the capability and resources of the person being approached—whether it is you, me, or anyone else. Furthermore, whether one's future path is filled with happiness or sorrow is often determined by the blessings or curses of the very person who came seeking aid; for words spoken in blessing or cursing never truly vanish. And if these elements did not exist, communication via mobile phones—or any other means—would be impossible; for it is the eternal, imperishable Akshara (syllable/letter) that forms words, and words that form the sentences used in writing, reading, and speaking to govern the functioning of this world. In essence, without writing, reading, or the issuance of verbal commands, the world could not function at all.

In this context, regarding service in the police department—whether in a junior or senior capacity—such service holds greater significance than any other role or department in the world. This is because the police department plays a pivotal role in the divine order of the world's functioning—a role far more critical than that of any other department or holder of the highest office. The significance of a police officer's role begins even before a human is born and persists even after death. Before birth, this involves investigations—triggered by complaints—to determine paternity; after death, it involves inquiries to identify a murderer. No other department or high-ranking official in the world holds such a profound role. Furthermore, in cases of homicide, only the police possess the authority and competence to ensure that the consequences of a person's actions are met with punishment—such as life imprisonment or the death penalty—a power not vested in any other high-ranking official globally.

It is also noteworthy that for every police personnel—from the lowest rank to the highest—their entire duty, actions, achievements, services, and livelihood are centered on the body—which houses the soul (a fragment of the Divine)—and are carried out through and by means of that body. Perhaps this is why saving and protecting a human life is considered the supreme act of benevolence in the world. Moreover, under the divine order governing the world, the entity known as the police—embodied by capable and empowered individuals—possesses the capacity to shape a person's life (the span between birth and death) into happiness or sorrow based on their deeds. They safeguard lives in the service of the public good, yet also hold the power to terminate a life—through encounters—should one engage in wrongful conduct. This validates the truth that God (whether known as Ishwar, Allah, or God) dispenses the fruits of a person's good and bad deeds through the police force, manifesting through the Karma Yogis (dedicated workers) who serve in roles ranging from the lowest to the highest ranks. It is also a fact that the path of duty for almost every police officer is fraught with immense personal struggle. Yet, despite these challenges, they spare no effort in fulfilling their obligations for the sake of the nation and society. Perhaps that is why it has been said:

Forgetting all personal sorrows, risking one's life for the welfare of others, Forsaking sleep, family, and food—only such a person joins the police force.

A humble tribute was paid by offering a floral garland at the statue of the late ideal mother, Shevarabai Dnyandev Bhosale.

A heartfelt homage. It was because of this ideal mother that lakhs of distressed families received justice. — Hon. District Judge Dr. Namdev Chavan. Representative, Pune District — Sneha Uttam Madavi Naigaon: A person lives their life and eventually departs, but there are some who, upon merging with the earth, leave tears in the eyes of society and light a torch of inspiration in its heart. The passing of the late Shevarabai Dnyandev Bhosale—a strong pillar of the tribal community's struggle and a mother whose embrace nurtured not just her own children but humanity itself—has created an irreparable void in the realm of social service. All of Maharashtra should draw inspiration from a mother like the late Shevarabai Dnyandev Bhosale, whose story reached even the President, Pratibha Tai Patil, and the Governor of Maharashtra, Bhagat Singh Koshyari. It was the first time in India that I saw a memorial for parents built right at their own residence. She merged into eternity in the soil of Naigaon, having received 29 awards during her lifetime. She was conferred the National Service Award by the hands of President Pratibha Tai Patil and Governor Bhagat Singh Koshyari. She provided guidance to numerous women. Hon. Judge Dr. Namdev Chavan paid humble tribute by offering floral garlands at the statues of the late Dnyandev Shiledar Bhosale and the late Shevarabai Dnyandev Bhosale. While offering condolences to the Bhosale family, his words reflected not only sympathy but also immense respect for the work and achievements of this great mother. The entire state of Maharashtra should look to the late Shevarabai Dnyandev Bhosale and Dnyandev Bhosale of Naigaon (Haveli Taluka, Pune District) as role models; they overcame great struggles to ensure their children received an education. One son, Bhaskar Bhosale, is a litterateur and works in a school, while another son, social worker Namdev Bhosale, has helped thousands of people from the Pardhi tribal community secure justice and exoneration from criminal charges. The third son is a journalist who serves selflessly and consistently strives to secure justice for aggrieved families. Journalist Sunil Gyandev Bhosale said, "The hardships and sacrifices our mother endured throughout her life constitute our true wealth. The support extended by mentors who visited our home during this difficult time of grief was not merely a source of comfort; it was an acknowledgment by society of the respect earned through our mother's work." On this occasion, honors were conferred by Mrs. Lakshmi Namdev Chavan upon Mrs. Lakshmi Namdev Chavan (wife of Hon. Judge Namdev Chavan), their son Akash Namdev Chavan, as well as Anil, Sunil, Rajshri, Sujata, Grishma, Surekha, Tukaram Bhosale, and Naigaon-based social worker Mrs. Alkatoi Gaikwad; Banutai and other dignitaries from various fields were also present.

Supreme Court vs. Magistrate – When the CJI had to ask, "How dare the Magistrate do this?"

Respecting a judicial order is not an option but a constitutional obligation—why was a Gautam Buddha University student issued a notice for a ₹5 lakh bond?

Advocate Kishan Sanmukhdas Bhavnani, Gondia, Maharashtra

Presented by Pinki Kundu, Co-Editor, Parivahan Vishesh

Editorial Preamble: The beauty of democracy lies not merely in elections, but in the fact that power bows before the law. The events that unfolded in the Supreme Court on September 9, 2026, raised questions about this fundamental principle.

On September 1, the Supreme Court stated that no punitive action would be taken against students. Yet, on September 4, the Executive Magistrate of Greater Noida issued a notice to a student involved in that very protest, demanding a bond of ₹5 lakh.

This prompted the bench led by Chief Justice Surya Kant to ask, "When there was a clear order from us, how did the Magistrate dare to do this?" This is not merely a case concerning a single student; it is a test of the Rule of Law.

Chronology of Events – A Factual Timeline

1. July 2026 – The Root of the Protest: Students staged peaceful protests at various locations, including Jantar Mantar in Delhi, over issues such as the NEET paper leak, under the leadership of the CJP.

2. September 1, 2026 – The Supreme Court’s Historic Order: The matter reached the Supreme Court. Invoking Article 142 (the extraordinary power to do complete justice), a bench comprising CJI Surya Kant, Justice Joymalya Bagchi, and Justice V. Mohana quashed all FIRs related to the protests held between July 20 and 25. The Court observed, "To ensure the future of the youth is not jeopardized by criminal cases, no further punitive action shall be taken against students who engaged in peaceful protests." Only 2,873 individuals with serious criminal backgrounds were excluded from this relief.

3. 4 September 2026 – Action contrary to the order: The Executive Magistrate of Greater Noida issued a notice under Section 130 of the Bharatiya Nagarik Suraksha Sanhita (BNSS)—formerly Sections 107/116 of the CrPC—to a second-year student of Gautam Buddha University who had participated in the protest. The notice required a personal bond of ₹5 lakh and two sureties of an equal amount to ensure the maintenance of peace for six months. The police alleged that the student had incited others to protest. 9 September 2026 – Supreme Court’s displeasure: When the matter came before the Chief Justice of India (CJI), the Court expressed strong displeasure and summoned an explanation from the concerned official. Under pressure, the administration subsequently withdrew the notice, yet the question remains: why was the notice issued in the first place?

Legal Analysis – Major Constitutional Questions

Question 1: What is Section 130 of the BNSS, and is it punitive? It is a preventive provision, not a punitive one. It involves obtaining a bond to maintain peace from an individual if there is a risk of a breach of law and order. However, the Supreme Court’s reasoning is that since the Apex Court had already declared the protest peaceful and directed that no action be taken against the students, how could preventive action be initiated based on that very same protest? This violates the spirit of the order.

Question 2: Did the administration commit contempt of the Supreme Court’s order?

- Article 144 – All civil and judicial authorities in India shall act in aid of the Supreme Court.

- Article 141 – An order of the Supreme Court is the law of the land across India.
- Section 2(c) of the Contempt of Courts Act, 1971 – Willful disobedience of a Supreme Court order constitutes criminal contempt, punishable by up to six months in jail and a fine. When the order explicitly stated "no punitive action," initiating new action based on the same facts falls under the category of contempt.

Question 3: What about the student's fundamental rights?

- Articles 19(1)(a) and 19(1)(b) – Freedom of peaceful protest and expression.

- Article 21 – A life with dignity. A personal bond of ₹5 lakh is financially crushing for a student.

- Article 14 – Equality. If the FIRs against other students were quashed, why is a separate bond required from this one student?

Question 4: Is the Magistrate above the law? Advocate Bhavnani rightly stated, "Officials are guardians of the law, not above it." The administration possesses power, but the Constitution defines its limits. If the Magistrate did not understand the order, three courses of action were available: seeking guidance from a superior officer, consulting the public prosecutor, or requesting clarification from the Supreme Court. Taking direct action amounts to arrogance.

Question 5: Impact on the global image of democracy—the world views India as the largest democracy. The true strength of this democracy is evident when even a poor student is confident that the protection granted by the Supreme Court will be implemented on the ground. If the local administration itself treats the Supreme Court lightly, in whom can the citizen place their trust?

Editorial Conclusion and Demand: This is not a matter of Magistrate versus student; it is a case of the judiciary's supremacy versus the executive's arbitrariness.

Merely withdrawing the notice is insufficient. The Supreme Court should establish an institutional mechanism for such cases: 0. Directives to Chief Secretaries of all states: It must be mandatory to communicate Supreme Court orders issued under Article 142 to the District Magistrates (DMs) and Superintendents of Police (SPs) of all districts within 24 hours. 0. The concerned Executive Magistrate should be called upon to explain their actions, and a Standard Operating Procedure (SOP) should be issued for the future, mandating that permission be obtained from the High Court before taking preventive action following a judicial order. - Compensation should be considered for the mental harassment suffered by the student.

Ultimately, the essence of this editorial lies in the words of Advocate Bhavnani: "The Constitution defines the limits of the administration's power." And there is no magistrate greater than the Constitution.
